Press Release – For Immediate Release

Exit Games and Metismo Announce Multi-Year Deal for Cross-Platform, Mobile and Online Game Development

HAMBURG, GERMANY – January 15, 2008 - Exit Games, a world leading service provider of mobile and online multiplayer gaming, today announced a partnership with mobile technology provider, Metismo, to offer a complete development and deployment environment for both mobile and online multiplayer games.

Under the terms of the deal, Exit Games' cross-platform multiplayer gaming platform, Neutron, will be integrated as an optional add-on to Metismo's Bedrock Engine to improve the development and porting of online game applications across multiple platforms.

The use of Bedrock with the seamless addition of Neutron reduces the overhead for coders/ porters by allowing game developers to write once and roll-out globally across a wide variety of handheld mobile devices. Advanced multiplayer and community gaming features such as matchmaking, chat, real-time multiplayer matches, in-game billing options, friend lists, and other social mechanisms will also be offered and supported on all major mobile and online platforms including J2ME, Flash, BREW, Windows Mobile and native Windows.

"Combining efforts with Metismo's Bedrock Engine solution offers mobile game developers around the world a chance to create innovative, social, multiplayer games in a global environment with minimal investment," said Tom Sperry, CEO of Exit Games. "As the industry grows, we think this will have a remarkable impact on how games are produced and distributed."

"Neutron's multiplayer functionalities combined with our Bedrock Engine provides coders with an exciting new ways to extend their games and strengthen customer loyalty" said John Chasey, CEO of Metismo. "This is just one of the many steps we are taking to align ourselves with industry leading partners in an effort to enable the most advanced consumer products to be brought to market."
